Sure Cure.
Charles F. Gore, a New Hampshire judge of the last century, was very nervous and irritable, but so determined that he usually found means of enforcing his desires. While he was holding a court in one of the northern counties he was much annoyed by the coughing of the spectators in the courtroom. He referred to it again and again, with increasing asperity, and finally directed the sheriff to remove from the courtroom the next man who coughed. This had a marvelous effect in stilling the audience. That evening a stranger afflicted by an incessant cough appeared at the village hotel. "I can tell you how to cure that," said a bystander. "You just go down to the courthouse. There's a little wizened judge there, and he'll put a stop to that cough of yours in less than five minutes. 'Sure cure!'"

History in Tapestry.
The "Bayeux tapestry," called Bayeux from the place where it is preserved, is a pictorial history on canvas, more minute in some particulars than written history, of the invasion and conquest of England by the Normans in 1066. Tradition says it is the work of Matilda, wife of William the Conqueror, and the ladies of her court and that it was presented by the queen to the Cathedral of Bayeux as a token of her appreciation of the services rendered to her husband by its bishop, Odo, at the battle of Hastings. The tapestry is a web of canvas or linen cloth 214 feet long by 20 inches wide. There are on it 1,512 figures, only three of which are those of women.

A Part of the Problem.
In an English inn, where some laborers were sitting one evening, mathematics became the topic of conversation, when one of the company propounded the old time problem, "If a herring and a half cost a penny and a half what would three herrings cost?" There was silence for several minutes, while all sat smoking and thinking. At last one of the thinkers spoke, "Bill, did you say 'errin' or mackerel?"

"About one year ago I lost nearly all of my hair following an attack of measles. I was advised by a friend to use Ayer's Hair Vigor. I did so, and as a result I now have a beautiful head of hair."—Mrs. W. J. BROWN, Mendon, Mass.

RESOLUTIONS

FRED J. SMALLEY

Once again the grim enemy death has sounded an alarm at the portals of our lodge. This time it is a call for one of our youngest members, who was still in the very promise and vigor of a useful life. Past finding out some of the dispensations of our Grand Master, and were it not that our faith leads us to believe that we shall sometime know these things that are so mysterious to us now, our life would be with it its sunshine. Wherefore let it

Resolved, That since it is in accordance with the plans of the Grand Architect that our brother, Fred J. Smalley be called from his labors here, to his rest in the Celestial Lodge above, we humbly bow to His infinite wisdom, and mourn our loss. Further, that in the death of our worthy brother we mourn the departure of a true and faithful member, one who had endeared himself to a large circle of acquaintances by his manly and upright dealings, his honesty of purpose and his brotherly regard for all. Also be it

Resolved, that we would extend to the family of the departed brother the heartfelt sympathy and sorrow of every member of the lodge, and commend them to the care of "Him, who doeth all things well." believing that "He will temper the winds to the shorn lambs." And be it finally

Resolved that our lodge and jewels be draped in mourning for our brother for thirty days; that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, a copy handed to the local papers for publication, and the record spread upon the minutes of the lodge.

Committee.

Cornishmen and Tails.

Natives of Devonshire, England, in past centuries used to say that Cornishmen all had tails, asserting that it was a sign of the divine disapproval of their infamy in cutting off the tail of Thomas a Becket's horse. A sixteenth century writer says: "So hath England in all other lands a perpetual infamy of taylor by these written legendes of Iyes, yet can they not well tell where to bestow them truly. An Englishman now cannot travayle in another land by way of marchandise or any other honest occupyng; but it is most contumeliously thrown in his teth that all Englishmen have tayles."

Juvenile Logic.

A little boy of four years of age on noticing for the first time a lock of gray hair on his father's head asked, "Papa, why are some of your hairs gray?"
Thinking to drive home a moral lesson, the father answered, "Papa has a new gray hair every time his little boy is naughty."
The child seemed lost in thought, but after a pause said bravely, "Then grandpa must have had awfully naughty boys."

There would be more great poets if there were fewer great critics.
